Linda Groff is a Professor of Political Science & Futures Studies at California State University, Domingues Hills. She holds Ph.D., M.A.L.D., and M.A. Degrees in International Relations from The Fletcher School of Law & Diplomacy (at Tufts University & Coordinated with Harvard University).

Dr. Groff has been teaching for 24 years, including 22 years at Cal. State University, Dominguez Hills, where she originally organized a Future Policy Studies Minor, and regularly teaches courses in futures, global, inter-cultural, peace & conflict resolution areas.

In addition, she is interested in the processes of creativity and learning in different cultures, evolutionary/change processes, and East-West spiritual traditions.

To Dr. Groff, the only game in town is how we human beings are going to learn to live together on this planet, in a way that not only lets us survive, but increasingly meets the needs of people on this planet, so that human creativity and spirit can be unleashed and humanity as a whole and in its wonderful diversity can evolve, using technology to improve our lives, while also living in harmony with, and as caretakers of, our natural environment, planet earth.
